

Accumulative Dissipation

Chris Sollars

Southern Exposure

401 Alabama Street @ 17th Street

Opening reception: Friday, January 13, 7 - 9 pm

Artist Talks: Friday, January 13, 6:30 pm

January 13 - February 18, 2006

Gallery Hours: 11 am - 5 pm, Tuesday - Saturday?

Chris had done a video installation a bit ago featuring people in garbage bags interacting with tourists and the like down near Union Square. It was pretty funny 'cause the group of 15 or so people who were dressed as bags would all sit together forming a giant mound of trash in random places like in one instance in the middle of an intersection prompting angry honks from motorists and camera flashes from the shoppers and tourists. You can view a video clip of it by clicking here. Pretty awesome shit, mang.

http://www.fecalface.com/whatever/openings/1_13_06_soex/

Here's some giant trash by Chris Sollars. Inside the bag is some video that I mentioned above.

Giant SUV.

Matthew Flegle... Pretty cool to look at, but whatever. here's some mumbo jumbo about it:

"His project Speech and Basins manipulate two types of Western vernacular architecture – a storage shed and church steeple. By altering the structure, Flegle changes the emphasis of the steeple from ascension to introspection. Inspired in part by the topology of the Klein bottle, he merges the two distinct structures so they share surfaces and become a continuous volume. This radical transformation creates a physical space for contemplation and seclusion."

Sarah Smith... wanted to get better photos of the moody scenery, but it was a bit too crowded. Sad Face. It was perdy.